Intro

Seeing as this is my first foray into Substack & this style in general, I figure it's a good starting point to recount my own experience. As a youngster, one of my favorite things to learn about was how other NS types got where they were ideologically. What caused an otherwise normal person to adopt such radical views? I'll continue this by putting my own journey out there, as well as observations I've made along the way.

Childhood

I don't come from a political family, outside of the basic rural Republicans & average older folk who watch Fox from time to time. I don't think there was much of anything influencing my beliefs that early. A notable exception being the History Channel, which during the 2000s would constantly play various documentaries about WW2. Like many others, I enjoyed the footage of Hitler, the Wehrmacht, Göbbels speeches, etc. I understood none of it, but I remember the aesthetics really striking me. The movie American History X was also something that struck me as a kid, the image of the Swastika & the old Skinhead scene. Again, I understood none of it, but it was striking nonetheless.

Exposure to Politics

Around the time I was in middle school, political issues began mounting online, which was important as I was a very online youth. Most of my time was spent on YouTube, browsing forums, etc.

These political undercurrents would eventually spring into the mainstream during the well known GamerGate fiasco. GG as a whole was pretty pointless, but throughout the ordeal I found myself firmly in the "Right Wing" of politics - of course this was from a 13 year old, so not any serious way. In the ensuing years, GG turned into the so-called "Culture War", the OG Trump campaign, and all the other political tides of the mid-2010s. At this point I was a firm Trump supporter, as was most of the people in my life in rural White family. I listened to Ben Shapiro, Jordan Peterson, Tim Pool, and the million other political channels throughout the web.

At some point in 2016 I was called a retard on iFunny by a man with a Heinrich Himmler profile picture, and for reasons I didn't yet understand he referred to me as just as bad as any SJW in the cringe compilations. I would encounter more like him, but more importantly I would develop a love of history.

In Search of the Truth

While my knack for history was originally nothing more than a Sabaton inspired read through of Wikipedia rabbit holes, it would lead me to looking into various historical figures - including the hated Nazis of yesteryear. I was partial towards labels like Nazi & Fascist, as these words had lost their sting during the era where every lefty would say Trump was "literally Hitler." I figured if it pissed them off so much than there must be something good about them.

I learned about Hitler, the NSDAP, Mussolini, etc. Overtime I would learn of more obscure figures like Commander Rockwell & Corneliu Codreanu. Steadily I began lumping myself in with these people & following more people characterized as 'Far'Right' - at the time being the WN 2.0 guys that made up what was called the AltRight, like Richard Spencer. In search of others who shared my beliefs, I would be directed towards a small forum known as IronMarch. The man who told me to head to that site was a member of Atomwaffen Division & served as a personal role model for a time, he was murdered by a subversive individual in 2018.

IronMarch

In joined the IronMarch forum in early 2017. I was immediately asked various questions like my race, age, etc., which was pretty odd for a web forum. They certainly weren't welcoming, as soon as I joined I got linked a file containing a ton of files. Infographics, PDFs, manifestos, books, etc. It took me about 3 weeks to get through it all. The man who originally pointed me to the forum helped me a lot whenever I had questions or trouble understanding certain things, as a lot of the IronMarch publications were certainly meant to be read by people already in the know. I learned more about politics, history, philosophy, and more in the first few months of joining that forum than any other time in my life.

Now, I didn't fully subscribe to it yet. At this point I still held on to a lot of the AltRight & WN 2.0 attitudes I originally grew up with, as well as being a staunch Christian. I followed the Swastika, but I didn't fully understand the worldview yet. I was also, regretfully, a Civic Nationalist. I fell into the camp now led by people like Nick Fuentes that truly thought we could all live peacefully under a truly Christian state. This wouldn't last long, as life experience & further study gradually wiped out such naïvety. Regardless, I still took much of it to heart & it laid the foundation of my worldview moving forward.

Atomwaffen Division was live at this time, with many of the notable forum posters being members.

IronMarch would be shut down near the end of 2017. Most people migrated to Discord, iFunny, Fascist Forge, and elsewhere. Unfortunately many were disconnected due to the abrupt nature of the site going down.

Wignat in Denial

In the aftermath of IronMarch going down I returned to iFunny, which had a sizable NS presence for a while. I would drift around several small groups trying to form, usually based on Discord or something similar, 90% of these died after a year or so, but it was good to network with some pretty good dudes. More than anything this era in my journey was marked by cognitive dissonance on my part. Certain things in my worldview simply didn't fit with my previously held moral & religious beliefs. Things like race, economics, egalitarianism, violence, etc.

For the most part I was simply in denial. I didn't want to judge people off their ethnicity. I didn't want a huge violent revolution or concentration camps. In the words of Hitler, "Close your hearts to pity." Gradually I reconciled my worldview with reality. I eventually abandoned Christianity, better understood the spiritual & metaphysics background to the petty politics & ideology, and general took a more mature & grounded perspective.

Atomwaffen Division

In mid to late 2019, I became an initiate in AWD. While it may seem a simple task, it was a large leap of faith for me personally. I would consider it my own version of when Tyler Durden & The Narrative have their first fight in Fight Club. Much has been said of the late AWD, most of which is false, but I will say that the men I was with are some of the best I've had the pleasure to work with. I would much rather go to war with my old AWD cell than the Infantry squad I currently serve in - which says a lot as I highly respect my colleagues.

To say AWD had some odd characters would be an understatement. It wasn't full of the WN 2.0 types with queer haircuts, tucked in polos, etc. For the most part it was filled with people easily mistaken as common frat boys. There was a decent sized chunk of your typical NSRM types with their weird tastes & long hair, which is the section I found myself in. Above all, they were National Socialists. Everyone I was with are men I could 100% see being distinguished members of the SS, had the time & place been different.

I won't speak of the revolutionary activism too much, as multiple friends from AWD are currently POWs, some still in trial. One thing I will bring up is Operation First Pillar, as my criminal investigation has already been completed (go fuck yourself Special Agent Young, you suck at your job). I may write about it in more detail in a dedicated AWD article, but the gist is we discovered the addresses of several journalists & sent them threatening mail, usually posters in the classic Dark Foreigner style. Even though what we did wasn't technically illegal, by standards of what constitutes a threat, the FBI naturally used this to deal their killing blow after targeting AWD for 3 years. Several prominent members were arrested in a very public show of force, usually on laughably trumped up charges. Many other members (including myself, as I was doxxed in the 2019 IronMarch leaks) were visited by, threatened, & harassed by the FBI. I've been told local PDs helped them at times, mine did not as I already had a love-hate relationship with my local sheriff from my teenage dirtbag years.

In the aftermath, AWD would finally stand down & drop flags. I believe this was a call from senior leadership, but don't know for certain. The guys that had flew under the radar were ghosted so they couldn't be connected with hotter members if the arrests continued. This all took place in early 2020, a year that eventually became a period of great change in all aspects of my life.

Violence 2020

One thing I skipped over in the last couple sections was the Boogaloo Movement. As absolutely cringy as it would increasingly become, it cannot be understated how important this Zeitgeist was in US politics. Although it was mostly filled with Libertarian & Conservative LARPers masquerading as Minutemen, the simple fact that such a large & mainstream movement advocating complete overthrow of the US government was as prominent as it was marked a significant shift in US politics. Things that usually would only be found on sites like IronMarch were being posted en masse on Facebook, Twitter, etc. It caused quite the controversy in the media. This movement, and the subsequent events in the following year would be the largest driver of Accelerationist attitudes, even outside NS guys, I've ever seen.

The next gift 2020 gave us was the beloved Coronavirus pandemic. I remember fondly seeing the early reports of a mystery outbreak in China in December 2019, eventually getting the name NCov-2019. No one could have guessed from those first Discord #news posts what would come a few months later. I feel I don't need to elaborate too much on the pandemic, most people remember what happened.

The next gift was the death of beloved son, brother, drug addict, & violent criminal by the name of George Floyd (PBUH). The initial reactions to this event weren't cut along racial lines nearly as much as they later would be, for the first few months it was overwhelmingly a general anti-Police sentiment - until later info & the classic anti-White rhetoric inevitably reared their heads. The Great Chimpout, affectionately referred to as the Summer of Love, vindicated every militant NS group in history. Funnily enough, George Floyd did more to advance pro-White sentiments than any AltRight type queer could ever dream of.

Another gift was the massive wildfires that broke out across the Western US & Australia. While this wouldn't have been super significant in a vacuum, in the wider context of 2020 it really added to the apocalyptic atmosphere of the time.

The final months of 2020 saw the closest we've come to actual civil war in our lifetime. Although I have many grievances with the Feds, seeing DHS clear out Portland during the Antifa uprising was a beautiful thing to witness. This was the absolute peak of the Trump Administration.

The final significant event of this era was the oh so controversial 2020 election & subsequent J6 riot. Seeing this happen in real time was truly surreal, if they protesters weren't a bunch of limp dick Conservatives maybe something great would have happened.

The FBI was lucky they took out AWD when they did, I have wet dreams about what we could've accomplished throughout this beautiful era.

On a personal level, I became firmly entrenched in my beliefs. I didn't learn much from 2020, so much as it confirmed what I already knew. For a few months I was a member of The Base, as were many AWD veterans, but this didn't last as we quickly realized that it was the next big target of the FBI's COINTELRO operation. We jumped ship before things got out of hand but I still enjoyed my time with the group & defend Norman Spear when his critics pipe up. In the absence of a clear flag to fly, I joined a local EcoTerror group & sabotaged construction equipment in my home area, which is a rural region heavily targeted for destruction so they can build more overpriced drywall houses for retiring snowbirds.

In ways I can't quite quantify, 2020 changed me. At some point along the way I became a man.

Walking Holocaust/Apoliteia

Shortly after the events stated above, I joined the military & continue to remain a ZOGbot. The fun thing about the military is they can't fire you, regardless of how abhorrent you are. Although I value my vocation as an Infantryman, I don't need this job so I'm very open about my beliefs. For a time, my nickname in my platoon was just "Nazi." I dabbled in more revolutionary NS groups, namely the National Socialist Order, founded by AWD vets & later subverted into the National Socialist Order of 9 Angels by the typical Satanist queers associated with known informant Joshua Sutter. This group is now defunct because all the good members left after the O9A types joined, later forming the National Socialist Revolutionary Front. I've assisted by passing on relevant information from my day job to other NS groups, particularly in the Terrorgram community, but for the time being I'm mostly absent from organized resistance.

My main actions for the past few years are to be a shining example of what a National Socialist should look like, a walking holocaust. I want lefties to look at me & just know I'm a threat. I always try to guide others on their own journey, as I'm now a fairly experienced member of the movement. I don't plan on remaining an apolitical type forever, as I plan on returning to the scene whenever I feel comfortable being a true leader of it, in the absence of unforeseen circumstances anyway. Until then, I will wage the War of the Catacombs.

Hail Victory

This was really well written and summarizes how I believe a lot of other peoples stories are. However it seems like you're more involved in the movement. I try to always be lowkey because I fear losing my career. How did you overcome such fears?
